Reflections on Morocco

*Steeped in history
and character,
Morocco has a lot to show you.*

In Morocco there is so much more to the eye than the beaten track as every corner turned reveals another hidden treasure. And for any tourist arriving in north Africa for the first time there is enough intrigue to fuel the imagination and leave the intrepid traveller thirsty for more. Its western beachlines gleam in the warm breeze, while growing tourist hotspot Marrakech flourishes under a hot furnace of culture, mystery and forgotten wonders and Casablanca provides an immediate understanding of Moroccan life. With the weather being as warm as the people are friendly, the only question you must ask yourself is where to begin your journey.

You could do a lot worse than find yourself in Marrakech where the laid-back atmosphere and visual spectacles cannot fail to seduce your senses and regardless of your budget you can find superb places to eat out and visit. Or why not simply take in your surroundings in the space of just seven days? Marrakech is known as the Red City and sits in southwestern Morocco under the foothills of the Atlas Mountains. While it may not be the most obvious holiday destination, its reputation as a blossoming travel hotspot is growing with each passing summer.
